PREFACE.

We have long been realizing the urgent necessity of a publication which would serve as a record and a guide to the development of the Japanese in this city and its vicinity, but our inadequate facility and the lack of the Japanese here did not warrant us in such an undertaking. To-day, however, with a Japanese population of more than three thousand in this part of the United States, we feel it incumbent on us to assume such a step lest it becomes too long neglected.

This motive has prompted us to publish the "Japan in New York," which, however small, will give a brief history of the organization of each Japanese institution, agency, store and the individual work, both in the English as well as in the Japanese languages.

The work of gathering data having only been started a month ago, coupled with the inadequate facilities of our publication department, has, we are sorry to say, prevented us from accomplishing more thorough and valuable work. We, however, shall not neglect to improve and better this little book in its future issue, until it can be recognized as one of the indispensables of the Japanese and Americans interested in things Japanese.

The Japanese section contains nearly a hundred items, while the English section only includes thirty-eight, which we selected as likely to prove interesting to our English readers, to whom we also offer several articles written by prominent gentlemen in this country.

We also supplement the book with the constitution of the Nippon Club as a representative Japanese club in this city, and a directory containing some one hundred and eighty Japanese residents here. This selection out of thirty hundred is made for no other reason than that they are perhaps more widely known.

Corrections and suggestions for improvement will always be received with high appreciation, as it is our aim and desire to make the "Japan in New York" a true history and a valuable guide to the Japanese development in this city and its vicinity.

JANUARY, 1908.

JAPAN AND THE UNITED STATES.

By Hon. Seth Low.

Ever since Commodore Matthew Perry prepared the way for Japan and the western world to enter into vital relations with each other, the United States and Japan have been close friends. I once asked a Japanese statesman why it was that Japan had been so ready to accept relations with the outside world, while China had been always so unwilling to do so. The statesman's reply was that in Japan there was some one on the inside to open the door; but that in China there had been nobody. This willingness on the part of Japan to come into contact with a different civilization she has wonderfully justified in her recent career. By first studying western civilization, and then adopting this and rejecting that feature of it, as fitted or not fitted for her use, she has made herself a world power, commanding the respect and admiration of all nations. During all this period of more than half a century she has had the cordial sympathy and good will of the United States. No nation has treated her more chivalrously, and no nation has taken such pride in her achievements.

This being so, it has come as a surprise and a grief to both nations to perceive that on our Pacific Coast a certain antagonism to Japanese laborers is both pronounced and active. It is easy to understand why, at first sight, there should be mingled with the grief of the Japanese a certain measure of indignation at this state of affairs; for it must have seemed to the Japanese as if they were being smitten in the house of their friends. For the same reason the regret of the American people at large has been the deeper, because such incidents seem to cast a shadow upon their historic friendship that has been as sincere as it has been continuous. Such an incident evidently may easily be misunderstood, and it is worth while, therefore, to try to make clear the exact limits of its significance; or, when these are understood, however much the fact may be regretted, the sting of it will be taken out.

No one can fully understand the incidents of San Francisco and Vancouver, and others like them, who does not appreciate the struggle that English-speaking laboring men are making to advance what they call "their standard of living." Both in England and in the United States this is the fundamental object of every labor union. Apart from questions of detail, which change with different conditions, the constant aim of the labor unions is to secure for the laborer larger wages and more of the comforts of life. This affords an important explanation of the long adherence of the United States to the policy of protection, because, by restricting the area of competition in industry it has enabled the laboring men to obtain higher wages than anywhere else in the world. It explains, also, the Contract Labor Law, which forbids laborers from any part of the world from being brought into the United States under contract to perform a specific work. It also explains, in large part, the Chinese exclusion act; and it explains, I feel confident, such manifestations of antagonism to the Japanese as the last few months have revealed both in the United States and in Canada. These do not indicate antagonism to the Japanese as a nation, nor to the Japanese as a people. They simply indicate the recognition by men of limited experience, engaged in a desperate struggle to improve their condition in life, that the Japanese are able to live, and to live comfortably, on a much smaller income than the laboring men of the western world can live upon. Recognizing this, and knowing how hard it is, at best, to improve their own conditions, the working men of the Pacific Coast, by these demonstrations against the Japanese, have simply indicated their determined purpose not to permit the conditions of their struggle to advance their standard of living to be made harder than they now are. The genuineness of this feeling must be taken into consideration by both nations, and the profound effect it is likely to have on the policy of the United States cannot be denied. But it is very important for the Japanese to understand that this attitude of the laboring men in America, as it affects them, is only an incident of a very much larger situation. In other words, it does not imply either scorn or dislike; but only recognition of a difference in the standard of living, which the Japanese will recognize as readily as we. It is not fanciful to say that, essentially, this attitude of American labor involves a compliment to the Japanese; for men do not object to a competition which they do not fear, and American labor would not fear Japanese labor in the United States if it did not recognize the splendid efficiency of the Japanese.

JAPAN AND HER PEOPLE.

By Prof. George Trumbull Ladd.

In the first place, I am persuaded that the chances for a peaceful development of the Far East, for some time to come, are better than they have been for the past century. It is true that in China there are many uncertain elements of disturbance and even of violent revolution. But if the Chinese themselves can proceed in a half-reasonable way to carry out their purpose of "China for the Chinese," and not under plea of doing this subvert all their old agreements, or prevent any progress by a sort of "dog-in-the-manger policy," China, too, may share in large measure the blessings of this peaceful development. I have confidence in the sincerity of both Japan and Russia as evidenced by their recent treaty; and the careful working out of the details affecting their common interests respecting fisheries, mining, passports, consuls and transportation, and telegraphic facilities cannot fail to bind the two nations together in many laudable ways. Already, although it is not two years since Mr. Weale's last book was written, its sad prediction of a speedy renewal of war are either wholly negatived or made more unlikely. It is several years since I assured my Japanese friends that sooner or later Japan and Russia must lay solid and equitable foundations for the protection of their common interests in the form of a permanent treaty of peace. These are the two nations which, with the exception of China, are altogether the most interested in the welfare of the Far East.

Another matter about which I now feel competent to express an opinion for the last half century. One of the most surprising things in modern history was the way in which the knightly spirit, the spirit called Bushido, descended upon all orders of the people during the Russo-Japanese war. The desirableness of conserving this spirit and transmitting it on into the future generations of peaceful development in industry and the arts, in science, morals and religion is widely recognized at the present time. But it is also recognized by the most thoughtful that this spirit itself needs to add other virtues to those which were most characteristic of it, and thus to adopt itself to the enlarged and more varied demands of modern life.

More especially is it hopeful to see how the arrangements are being strengthened for raising up a body of men fitted for industrial and commercial activities in intercourse with the entire civilized world who shall answer and remove the reproach so often brought against the Japanese business man. The entire public system of education, and in particular the training given in the commercial schools and colleges of Japan, lays more and more emphasis upon the moral elements. To elevate the reputation of the nation for not only industry and skill in commerce, but for veracity and honesty in commerce, a strenuous and praiseworthy effort is being made. I was made aware of this in a very convincing way as I lectured to about one thousand students and teachers on "Commercial Ethics" in the Higher Commercial College at Tokyo; and to other large last year everything possible under the very difficult circumstances has been done, and successfully done, by the Japanese Government to mitigate and redress these wrongs. Japan is doing for Korea what Korea could never do for herself, and what no other foreign forces, political or religious, could do for her. And in saying this I wish distinctly to contradict the statements made by the anti-Japanese paid agents of the ex-Emperor, in this country and abroad, and pronounce the major part of them, as bearing upon present conditions, either gross exaggerations or something far worse. All this and much more in the same direction I am prepared to prove in a book upon the subject soon to be issued.

I was also greatly stimulated and encouraged by the sincere, widespread and intense interest in ethics, and in questions of moral import which seemed to prevail among all classes in Japan. In my intercourse with the leaders, not only in educational circles, but also in the army, navy, civic service and the business and professional classes, the importance of the moral elevation of the nation appeared to be recognized as never before. The prevalent feeling was that something more than military and naval equipment and prowess, something including, and yet beyond mere progress in "science," so-called, was necessary if Japan was to go forward in the path to the higher and highest levels of national life, in which she has been climbing so sturdily and successfully opinion is the prospect of the increased welfare of Korea under the control and leadership of the Japanese Resident-General. There were undoubtedly not a few wrongs done to the Koreans by low-class Japanese toward the end of and immediately after the Russo-Japanese war.

But even these wrongs probably never equaled those done by the British in their colonies of India and Burmah; much less those of the French in Madagascar, of the Dutch in Java and Samartar, of the Belgians on the west coast of Africa, or even of the United States in the Philippines. I say, however, what I know to be true, when I assert that for the audiences in the similar institutions in Kobe and Nagasaki. One of the Japanese generals, a veteran of the Russo-Japanese war, who is in charge of many thousands of the recruits for the army, expressed his intense and hopeful interest in the ethical movement as of advantage to what he was pleased to call his task of imparting "spiritual training" to the soldiers.

In this connection it is not improper to note the fact that the interest of the nation in religion, as affording a needed "spiritual uplift" to the national life, is greater than I have ever known it to be before.

And, finally, I am, with all the friends of Japan, rejoicing in the hope of an expansion of the industrial and commercial activities of the nation, which shall be characterized by an improved morality and which shall result in a large growth of the resources of the country and of its power to contribute its full share to the welfare of mankind.

New Haven Conn., Dec. 19, 1907.

AMERICA'S PLACE IN JAPANESE CIVILIZATION.

By K. K. Kawakami.

It is commonly said that Occidental civilization first dawned upon the Land of the Rising Sun with the appearance in 1853 in the Bay of Tokyo of the American squadron under the command of Commodore Perry. To be more accurate, we date the advent of western culture in our country from the middle of the sixteenth century. Following upon the heels of Mendex Pinto's "discovery" of Japan in 1542, a number of Spanish clergymen of the Jesuit sect came to Japan, and preached Christianity among the islanders with so remarkable a success as to reap within twenty years a harvest of 300,000 souls from the highest and the lowest walks of life. Had not these clergymen been the forerunners of the conquistador, but the true servants of God and His Christ, the military magistrate of the time would have never ordered the repression of Christianity, which was soon followed by an exclusive and inclusive edict, prohibiting the natives from going abroad and the foreigners from landing on the shores of the Land of Gods, as the Japanese then called their country.

Yet, in spite of this exclusive policy, the Dutch alone in preference to all other nationalities were allowed to settle and trade on one of the southern islands of Nippon, for their purpose was known to be purely mercantile, unmixed with politico-religious ambitions.

Thus, first through the Jesuit missionaries and then through the Dutch traders Japan had come into contact with western culture before the American men-of-war first steamed up the Tokyo Bay. To the Netherlands, indeed, credit is due for first having taught the Japanese the western sciences and arts, and especially engineering, mining, pharmacy and astronomy. And yet it was only after Commodore Perry forced open the doors of Japan that modern civilization shed its dazzling rays upon the hitherto secluded nation. If the civilization brought by the Spaniards and the Netherlands may be likened to a faint ray of light struggling through the mists of an early dawn, the enlightenment that followed in the wake of American expedition may not unfitly be likened to a full flood of daylight.

It must be written large in the modern history of Japan that it was Townsend Harris's uncommon patience, sympathy and largemindedness that succeeded in persuading the insular nation to throw open its ports to foreign communication. Without belittling in the least the important part played by Commodore Perry, we can say that the regeneration of Japan would have been deterred many years longer than it was but for Harris's shrewd and withal honorable diplomacy. No sooner this America's first plenipotentiary to Japan concluded a treaty of commerce with the Shogunate than the other powers vied with one another to wrest a similar privilege from the islanders. From that time dates the appearance in the Sunrise Empire of the new régime; from that time, too, a new figure became an important factor in Japanese administration—a figure mainly responsible for the political and social reorganization of the young country. This new figure was the "foreign employee," as the Japanese called him, who, with his store of modern knowledge, assisted the rejuvenated nation in its struggle for reformation. Let us cite a few instances.

A set of Englishmen organized the navy after the British system, while another undertook the mint. A French jurist codified law, abolishing torture and other mediaeval usages. Germans taught us medical science, having for years directed the whole medical institutions of the country. The army, too, was organized by Germans, and was drilled into the Japanese by German officers.

To the Americans Providence assigned the noblest of tasks, the unerring execution of which is essential to the wholesome development of any nation—I refer to education. The present educational system, traced to its origin, is the work of a handful of Americans, who in the early days of new Japan devoted their best powers of mind and body to the education of the flower of Japanese youth, who in their manhood were destined to become statesmen and educators.

The sentiment of gratitude which the Japanese nation as a whole entertain toward the Americans is more deeply seated than is imagined on this side of the water. The sequence of unpleasant events that followed in the wake of the unpropitious school incident in San Francisco is nothing but ripples on the surface of ocean, powerless to disturb the calm of its depth. Like other countries, Japan has her political demagogues, her sensational journalists, her mischief makers, who do not scruple to satisfy their unholy desires at the expense of their own country and its friend; but the men at the helm will steer the ship of state in the right direction. Let Mr. Hearst and his newspapers exhaust their language in the prediction of an American-Japanese war; meanwhile Japan will bend all her energies to the cultivation of the arts of peace and the promotion of her commercial interests in Manchuria and Korea.

MITSUI & COMPANY.

445 Broome Street.

The owners of this company, Viscount Mitsui and his brothers, are ranked as the richest men in Japan. Their business is not limited to the import and export trade alone, but many other lines, such as banking and other industries, are under their control and management.

The company has branch offices throughout the world, of which the New York branch is one of the most important tributaries. The Director-General, Takashi Masuda, is known as one of the ablest business men Japan has ever produced.

The New York branch was established in 1896 under the management of Mr. Kenzo Iwahara, who has recently been replaced by the present manager, Mr. Kikusaburo Fukui. The principal business of the New York branch is the import and export of raw silk, cotton, machinery, rails and other steel products, mattings and Japanese goods in general. Its employees number fifty-six, including twenty-three Americans.

MOGI, MOMONOI & CO.

11 Barclay Street.

Mogi, Momonoi & Company are the successors of Mogi, Imanari & Co., which was organized in 1892. Though the company was at that time only a retail store, it is now ranked as the leading wholesale house of Japanese crockery and fancy goods, with four branch stores in this country.

MORIMURA BROS.

546 Broadway.

This company was established in 1874 by the late Toyo Morimura, younger brother of the Japanese millionaire, Mr. Ichizaemon Morimura, and was the first store of any kind established in this city by Japanese. At first the store aimed only at the retail business of Japanese fancy goods, but the favorable business prospect soon necessitated its change of policy from retail to a wholesale nature. The first retail house on Sixth Avenue, which was conducted by only a few employees, has been so advanced that it has now a force of over a hundred and twenty, including several Americans. The annual amount of business done by this company is estimated at about $5,000,000.

Mr. Yasukata Murai is part owner and holds the office of general manager. The four departments of which the company is composed are managed by Sanemitsu Hirose, Kuniichi Tezuka, Minoru Tanaka and Shigehide Matsubara, respectively. Mr. C. W. Colles holds one of the most important positions as its chief accountant.

MORIMURA, ARAI & CO.

109 Prince St.

This company was organized under the partnership of Messrs. Ichizaemon Morimura and Ryoichiro Arai, in October of 1892, for the sole purpose of importing Japanese raw silk to this country. At the commencement it required only eight people to handle the 2,145 bales of raw silk, but the business has so rapidly increased that now it numbers twenty-two employees, who handle over 25,466 bales out of 70,241, the total export from Japan during the year of 1906. Nearly 36% of the gross amount of Japanese raw silk exported is credited to this company, they being the largest silk importers.

The company is now managed by Mr. R. Arai, the very pioneer of the silk exporters of Japan.

NIPPON CLUB.

44 W. 85th Street.

The Nippon Club was organized in March, 1905, by the leading Japanese residents of the city and is now presided over by Dr. J. Takamine, while Mr. Rinichi Uchida is looking after the club management. Its constitution, which we are supplementing to our little publication, is self-explanatory of the organization, necessitating no further mention.

DR. HIDEYO NOGUCHI.

Japan has produced a scientist that she may well be proud of. To Dr. Hideyo Noguchi is due the credit as the discoverer of the antidote for the bite of the American rattlesnake. Several important researches widely known to the medical world are also credited to him. Dr. Noguchi was born in a northern province of Japan some thirty years ago. He graduated from the Medical College of Tokyo in 1897 and entered the University of Pennsylvania in 1900, where he became a member of the faculty later. From this he retired in 1904 and became actively engaged in research work in several institutions. He is at the present time an associate of the Medical Department of the Rockefeller Institute.

NOZAWAYA.

Mr. Kihachiro Okura, one of the few Japanese millionaires, is the owner of the above company. The headquarters are located in Tokyo. The New York branch was established in the year 1901 and first managed by Mr. Umajiro Yamada.

Its chief business is to export machinery, iron products, etc., to Japan and other Eastern countries. The office is now conducted by several Japanese and Americans under the general management of Mr. Hatsumi

Okura, the millionaire's adopted son.

SAKABE & SEKINE.

530 Broadway.

In September, 1906, this company was established by Messrs. Jiro Sakabe and Ioji Sekine, with its headquarters at Kobe and this city. They are importers and exporters of Japanese shoe brushes and American fancy goods. The main office at Kobe is conducted by Mr. Sakabe, while the New York branch is managed by Mr. Sekine.

SEKINE FARM.

Midford, Long Island.

There is one Japanese naturalized American who holds an American office—that of Road Commissioner of Midford, L. I. He is Mr. Yeisaburo Sekine, well known among the Japanese for his success and wide experience in farming. Mr. Sekine came to this country some nine years ago and started life as a hunter. He is to-day the owner of a large farm covering several hundred acres at Midford, Long Island.

SHIMAMURA & CO.

579 Broadway.

Mr. Shimamura and a few other Japanese conceived the idea of opening a store for the sale of Japanese fancy goods and art objects in the year of 1888 in Atlantic City, N. J.

At the time of the Chicago Exposition in 1893 and the St. Louis International Exposition of 1904 they opened a bazaar, meeting with great success. Present store in Broadway was opened in April, 1906, by Messrs. Shingo Shimamura and Toyokichi Yokoya. The former is looking after the buying interests in Japan, while the latter represents the company on this side. He is assisted by his manager, Mr. T. Oka.

TAJIMI TRADING COMPANY.

DR. JOKICHI TAKAMINE.

521 W. 179th St.

The name of Dr. Jokichi Takamine is known the world over as the discoverer and manufacturer of the Taka-Diastase and Adrenaline, the two wonders of the medical discoveries.

Since the time he came to this country in 1885, Dr. Takamine has devoted his entire energy, time and money to his professional studies. One of his greatest achievements was the industry of ferment extracted from the wheat hulls. This, however, met with an unhappy fate through an incendiary fire, brought about by the jealousy of his rival malt manufacturers and brewers. Mrs. Caroline Takamine is the daughter of Col. E. V. Hitch, who took a conspicuous part in the war of secession. The chemical laboratory is in charge of the doctor's assistant, Mr. Keizo Wooyenaka, an able chemist.

TAKATA & COMPANY.

60 Wall Street.

The founder of this company, Mr. Shinzo Takata, ranks among the multi-millionaires and leading business men of Japan. The nature of the business of this company is the buying and contracting for the government of materials, iron and steel products used by the Imperial Navy and Army. The New York branch, which was established in 1896, is represented by the millionaire's son, Mr. Shinjiro Takata, and is under the direct management of Mr. Edward Young. Four Japanese and ten Americans comprise the office force.

YOKOHAMA SPECIE BANK.

63 Wall Street.

The Yokohama Specie Bank has the honor of being the only Japanese bank which has branches and agencies throughout the four corners of the globe. One of its most important branches is the house at 63 Wall Street, the very centre of the American world's finance. The bank's capital is 24,000,000 yen with Baron Korekiyo Takahashi as its President.

The New York branch was established in the year of 1879 with only two employees, under the management of Mr. Kasaburo Ashidate. Its development, however, has been amazingly rapid and now it has thirty employees, including thirteen Americans, under the general management of Mr. Kenji Imanishi, assisted by Mr. Reitaro Ichinomiya. Since the Japanese war, loans have been floated in this market. The Bank of Japan established its agency and is represented by Dr. Yeijiyo Ono, with headquarters in the Yokohama Specie Bank.

This company was established by Mr. Kichirobyoe Yamanaka of Osaka, in the early twenties for the purpose of exporting Japanese antique art objects. The New York and Boston stores were opened in 1893 and 1895 respectively. In 1900 the company was reorganized under the partnership of the senior Mr. Yamanaka and his brothers and sons. The most expensive Japanese antique art objects, such as bronze and silver work, etc., are found in the company's stores.
